FINGER PHONICS

PEP
The Positive Engagement Project
Making a difference...not a dollar.
Five Finger Phonics is a method to teach letter sounds in a way that students can truly use as they begin to read. The gestures associated with the images in Five Finger Phonics fully involve the student’s eyes, ears, mouth and body as they learn phonemic awareness, the alphabet, and how to read, write, and spell. The key difference with Five Finger Phonics is that each body movement, or gesture, can be done on one hand (or less), where most programs incorporate full body gestures that generally ask the students to use both arms and sometimes get out of their seats and integrate their entire bodies. Full body gestures are fun, but can be difficult for a student to use as they hold a book and read. By creating gestures that can be done on one hand, we leave the other hand available to track the words in the book as they are reading.

The idea of Five Finger Phonics came over a decade ago when a classroom of twenty ESL Kindergarten students couldn’t transfer the huge gestures into their everyday reading. It was with that in mind that Five Finger Phonics was created. If the reader could make the gestures with one hand, or less, then they could track with their other hand and never lose the flow needed to put the sounds together to read words. As you read you will notice that The Positive Engagement Project has outlined suggestions on how to use the images and gestures with your students.
What Are Five Finger Phonics Learning Bricks?

Five Finger Phonics Learning Bricks are a combination of images and movements, both used in conjunction to introduce and teach a letter sound. Letters are symbols and are very abstract for young children. The more abstract learning is, the less the students understand and remember. Our goal is to make this less abstract. The first card shows the sound and how it is written. Below is an example of the Aa card (notice there are two separate cards).

The Five Finger Phonics Sound Learning Brick shows the sound in both upper and lower case forms.

Penmanship strokes along with top, dotted middle, and bottom lines for each letter/sound.

Colored boarder identifies if the letter/sound is a consonant or vowel. Vowels are identified in purple, while consonants are represented in red.
The second card has an image and gesture associated with the sound card (note: the vowels will have both short and long sounds represented by two different Image/Gesture cards.) The image on the card gives the student something concrete to associate with the sound. There is a nice collection of images ranging from animals to everyday items for the students to see. The image is directly linked to the physical gesture that is connected to the letter sound and image. There is a lot of research that states when a physical gesture can be connected, the brain remembers. Studies show that anytime we physically perform, memory is enhanced.

The Five Finger Phonics Image/Gesture Learning Brick shows an image that is linked to the Aa sound brick.

Colored boarder identifies if the letter/sound is a consonant or vowel. Vowels are identified in purple, while consonants are represented in red.
What is on the back of a Five Finger Phonics Learning Brick Card?

The back of each Five Finger Phonics Learning Brick Card is equipped with the following: proper sound associated with letter /sound, smaller version of the visual on the front, a physical movement (done with five fingers or less), a list of visuals to show your students, a list of words that either start with the letter or have the letter (vowel) sound in the middle, food items to further engage the kids and to strengthen the letter sound, a story title or two to read to the class, a hook activity to introduce the letter and sound, hands on manipulative activity, and a song or two to sing for that letter/sound.

The activities on the back of each Five Finger Phonics Learning Brick are a few more tools for teachers to add to their extensive lists of activities for each letter and sound.
Why are there two cards for each sound?

The first card is the letter that represents the sound, upper and lower case, along with penmanship arrows. If the letter/sound is a vowel it will be bordered in purple; if it is a consonant sound, it will be bordered in red. The second card is the image/gesture card which has an image to be a visual cue for the students to what the sound is. Accompanying the image on the card is a physical gesture that acts as an additional cue to the students to the sound of the letter. The gesture for each letter/sound is written down on the letter reference page which also has some teaching suggestions and activities.

What if a letter has more than one sound?
For letters that have more than one sound we have created different images and gestures for each. If you just want to focus on the short vowels, then do not use the image and gesture card for the long vowels. We provide the cards and ideas, but we leave the professionalism up to you on how you choose to use these materials.

How should the cards be used?
For each letter of the alphabet we have a reference page of activities and the image/gesture explanation. Besides the suggestions on that page, we suggest you use a large portion of your classroom walls to post the Five Finger Phonics Learning Bricks. When using the bricks, the teacher must understand that simply showing the picture, performing the gesture once or twice by the teacher is not going to get it done. It is imperative that we give our students the opportunity to teach and discuss with other students. The key is for the kids to verbalize (output for the students) the sounds and use the image and gestures. As any Kindergarten teacher will tell you, young students need massive amounts of repetition when learning their sounds; the gestures and activities make learning the sounds fun and help keep the students actively engaged.

By having students work in small groups of two or three, we are encouraging them to take risks they would never take if they had to speak in a whole group setting. Also, ELL research tells us that the best way to learn a new language is to speak it; that holds entirely true for all students. Turning your Five Finger Phonics Learning Bricks as an interactive alphabet allows all of our students a safe environment to speak, discuss, and teach. Even the shyest of students is more likely to discuss a concept if only one other person is going to hear.

Along with an image and gesture for each sound, we have included some fun activities to introduce the sounds to your students. The activities can be for individual, small, or whole group instruction and are also located on the letter/sound reference page.
What would the Five Finger Phonics Learning Wall look like?

Create your alphabet on your classroom wall starting with only the sound cards like the example below.

Kids should notice that some letters are bordered in purple and others in red. As you introduce certain sounds add the image/gesture card underneath the sound cards (the order in which you do this is up to you). This is your Five Finger Phonics Learning Wall.
For letters that have more than one sound you can choose to add additional image/gesture cards.
You can also use your Five Finger Phonics Learning Wall as a word wall. Depending on what skill you are working on, you could create a list of words starting with, ending with, or contain the sound in the middle.
